History of the event	The history of feminism in India can be divided into three phases: the first phase, beginning in the mid-19th century, initiated when reformists began to speak in favour of women rights by making reforms in education and customs involving women; the second phase, from 1915 to Indian independence
Significance of the event	Awareness programs about women's protection laws are important because they: <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Empower women Legal awareness programs can help women understand their legal rights and duties, and how to use the justice system to address their grievances. This can help women participate in political activities and assert their rights. <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Change societal attitudes Public awareness campaigns can help change societal attitudes towards women's safety. <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Encourage women to speak out Online movements like #MeToo and #CallItOut have encouraged women to speak out against harassment and violence. <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Educate young people Gender sensitization programs in schools and colleges can educate young people about respect and equality.

Awareness programs about women's protection laws can help women understand their rights and access services that promote their economic and social empowerment. They can also help to:

- Publicize laws and policies

Awareness programs can help to send the message that violence against women is unacceptable.

- Build community support

Awareness programs can help to build community support for women's rights and an enabling environment for women to exercise their rights.

- Improve access to justice

Awareness programs can help to improve access to justice for women, especially in rural areas.

- Increase confidence

Awareness programs can help to increase women's confidence to fight back against violence.
